Grow Your Own Food

An Amazing Opportunity for DuPage 4th Graders

Many of you may not know that I am an avid gardener. I learned from my dad, and I have such fond memories of spending time with him in the garden.

Today my family has a large backyard garden. We keep our friends, family, and the Farm Bureau in produce throughout the summer. In my time at the DuPage County Farm Bureau, I have seen a great need to educate our urban students about where their food comes from because it is not from the grocery store! So, I am excited to announce that we will be hosting a special program next spring that gives students a hands-on experience in plant care and gardening.

DuPage County Farm Bureau has partnered with the

Kara Norton

College of DuPage to offer FOUR THOUSAND 4th grade students the unique opportunity to transplant and care for a cherry tomato plant. Teachers will show a 15-minute video lesson featuring DCFB and COD staff that focuses on plant care. Each student will then transplant their tomato plant into a larger pot, take it home, and care for it over the summer. They will chart the plants' weekly progress and end with a recipe featuring their produce. DCFB will be posting additional content for families to follow over the summer as they care for their plants.

This is the largest educational project our organization has ever undertaken, and we'd love for you to be a part of it! We are looking for

Total Students Reached in the 2022-23 AITC Year: 47,484

Teacher Quote about an AITC Visit:

"Love the videos that Denise incorporates into her presentations! Denise is very knowledgeable about agriculture!"

— 3rd Grade Teacher, Cowlshaw Elementary

AITC wrapped up the school year in June with visits to summer schools and community events. Many of our summer school participants learned about dairy, soybeans, and soil. On June 13th DCFB and AITC hosted a special Legislator Event with the Illinois Soybean Association at Tri Town YMCA in Villa Park. The day-campers learned about soybeans and their many uses, and our local legislators got to see our program in action while meeting with DCFB directors, ILFB staff, and the Illinois Soybean Association. We ended June with our annual AITC Educator meeting to discuss our plans for next year! We're excited to see you all in September!

Did You Know?

Fritos Chili Cheese Salad

Source: www.momsmdish.com

Frito Corn Salad is out of this world delicious. Using just a few simple ingredients, you will have a crispy, crunchy and creamy salad that is impossible not to binge eat.

INGREDIENTS:

16 oz corn
16 oz red bell peppers
1/2 purple onion
1 lb cheddar cheese
9 oz chili Fritos
1/2 cup mayonnaise

INSTRUCTIONS:

Prepare all ingredients. Dice bell peppers and onion into small pieces. Grate cheese on the larger side of the grater. Break up Fritos a bit, keeping it the size that suits you best.

If you plan to serve the salad later, lay out the ingredients separately without mixing. Add mayonnaise right before serving the salad. Do not put chips in until you are ready to serve. Toss everything together and serve right away.

Farm provides summer education

Having braved a gravel road, a long driveway and an unleashed outdoor dog, a college intern approached our front steps ready to give his pitch. He worked door-to-door selling books and digital resources that supplement school coursework in math, science and language arts. I kindly shared some time with the business major on the front porch, where he quickly learned that supplemental education of a different sort defines our kids' summer days.

Our 15-year-old son works on the family farm. Our 17-year-old daughter operates small businesses selling baked goods and home-grown sunflowers. Together, the kids maintain a flock of hens and sell eggs to family, neighbors and our daughter's home-based bakery. With poultry in view, the San Diego native wondered what it meant to "show chickens," as the kids had done that morning at the fair.

The farm offers a summer classroom filled with opportunities to gain life skills in problem-solving, management, organization and efficiency.

The kids learn to work in heat, identify approaching rain and witness the implications of drought. We hope they gain responsibility, a sense of self-sufficiency and a work ethic through a combination of disappointment, triumph, energy and exhaustion.

Because classroom experiences don't teach how to handle a calf that escapes the pasture fence. Or that drought means feeding winter stores of hay to the cows when the summer grass doesn't grow. Our daughter reconciles bank statements, communicates with adult customers, and studies the bloom habits of various sunflower varieties. Our son changes oil in tractors, understands the functions of a planter meter and can operate more than a dozen pieces of farm equipment.

The farm work shifts to maintenance of harvest machinery by mid-summer. Sunflowers bloom and roadside sales ensue. Planning work accelerates for the kids' biggest community service event just after Labor Day. Their summers are spent unrelated to their peers at times, but I hope they enter society as responsible, self-driven citizens who can express compassion, exhibit common sense and make a difference.

The intern left with a tip in lieu of a sale and a glimpse into a farm-inspired approach to education. Like us, he desired to make the most of the opportunities presented to him.

Venus and Jupiter have both dropped into the solar glare, ending their lengthy reigns as evening stars. Mercury remains just above the horizon in the western evening twilight at magnitude 0. Mars, six times fainter, hovers above it. The 3rd finds Saturn just above the Moon, which moves on to form a predawn conjunction with Jupiter on the 8th. The Perseid meteor shower arrives on the 11th and 12th; it's best seen after midnight, when rural observers can expect a meteor a minute. The Moon won't interfere, making for excellent viewing conditions. Beginning around

Elevate Expectations with Raised Bed Gardening

Whether for convenience or accessibility, raised beds are a popular option for growing fruits, vegetables, or ornamental plants. Raised bed structures elevate the soil, and with it comes a variety of advantages for growing plants.

Using raised beds may allow gardening in soils where it may otherwise be difficult to grow plants, such as areas with poor drainage or compaction issues. Because these beds are raised above the ground, compaction shouldn't be an issue because there won't be any foot traffic on them.

Raised beds also have better drainage, and the soils warm up earlier in the spring compared to in-ground beds allowing an earlier start to the gardening season. Since they are contained, they also tend to have fewer weed problems, although this can vary depending on the soil used to fill the beds.

Raised beds can also provide those with accessibility concerns, such as individuals who use a wheelchair or have difficulty working at ground level, with gardening opportunities.

While there are many advantages to raised beds, there are also some disadvantages. Raised beds must be constructed, which can come at a cost. While recycled materials can be used, there is still some added work to construct them. Filling raised beds can be expensive, especially when building large beds. Some crops do not work well in raised beds. Sweet corn requires larger blocks of plants to ensure proper pollination, and large vining crops like pumpkins can overtake a bed. Finally, raised beds tend to dry out faster than in-ground beds, so they will likely need to be watered more frequently.

Raised beds are often constructed with wooden boards. Cedar and cypress wood are commonly used because they are naturally rot-resistant. Alternatives to wood include materials such as cinder blocks, plastic lumber, and metal.

Pressure-treated wood is another option for constructing raised beds. Some people have concerns about using pressure-treated wood when growing food crops. Newer chemicals used in pressure-treating wood, such as micronized copper azole, CA, or alkaline copper quaternary ammonium, ACQ, are less toxic compared to previously compost and garden or topsoil. Over time the compost or other organic matter used will decompose, which will cause the bed to settle. Because of this, more soil and compost may need to be added to the bed each year. Explore more about this at go.illinois.edu/RefreshRaisedBeds.

How much soil does a raised bed need? Multiply the length of the bed by the width and height — length x width x height — to get the raised bed's volume. When calculating, make sure to use the same unit of measure for all parts — feet, inches, etc.

For more research-based information on gardening, contact a local Illinois Extension expert at go.illinois.edu/ExtensionOffice.
